

Charity Inglis
Resident of Noblesville, Indiana
Employed in Indianapolis, Indiana

I added my home number to the no call list in order to eliminate unwanted solicitation calls. I still get many calls from organizations that are not included with the law's limitations. Organizations such as veterans groups and other charities that are exempt from submitting to those requirements. I don't like getting those either. I certainly don't want organizations that I have done business with to automatically be allowed to call and interrupt my home life simply because I have a business relationship with them. If that would become the policy of those organizations, allowed by an amendment or change to the current law, I can tell you that I would no longer do business with those organizations.

I work full time, and am a mother of two small children. I only have a few hours a day with them to read books together, work on homework, attend sports events and practices, ask them about their day and play with them, if there is time. I do not want to be interrupted by solicitations from businesses that I did not give permission to call me. I realize they are trying to market a product or a service, but times have changed. More people are relying on information about businesses and services from others that have had experiences with them. I use the internet to search for things that I may need. If I require a product or a service, I will seek it out. Leave that decision to the customer. I think you will find that most of us want to choose for ourselves.